“I wanted to be Youth MP because it’s a great chance for someone like me who is interested in law and politics to get immerse. My school also recognised this and encouraged me to apply to which I did with passion. Change and Rangatahi go hand-in-hand, meaning change and I go hand-in-hand. That means it is my responsibility to create change or help push forward change not only for my betterment in knowledge or helping to forward my career in politics but to help progress Aotearoa to be better for not just citizens but rangatahi. I am incredibly passionate about feminism and wish to incorporate and bring a female-related problem to Parliament as I feel that if I, a woman, won’t bring it up, then who will. Aotearoa is a kind, equal place and we should constantly reflect that especially gender-wise if not race.”
